Pool tables in the Montpelier Y. M. C. A. Revolutionary? Rather.

It is a safe guess that the Vermont legislature will send Elroy Kent to life imprisonment rather than to the gallows.

Although hearing his place of residence, President Taft is not wearing home. Every place in the United States is his home, only he is more acquainted with the Washington home just at present.

In spite of an industrial year which was not too good, the struggling St. Johnsbury and Lake Champlain railroad succeeded in reducing its obligations somewhat during the fiscal year just ended. It was done, however, by cutting operating expenses and thus, presumably, the public paid the cost in poorer service.

While it is perhaps useless to try to knock anything like decent manners into the heads of some of our professional pugilists, we can at least demand that they spare our lives when they go scot-free about in automobiles. Ketchel, arrested in San Francisco for perhaps fatally injuring a man, is evidently trying to imitate that dark gentleman who recently pounded him into retirement, so far as championship aspirations are concerned.

Such hounding organizations as the Marshfield Knights of Pythias and their Pythian Sisters will not hesitate long about rebuilding the structure which was destroyed by fire last Saturday; there surely is plenty of energy to meet the somewhat trying conditions by which they find themselves confronted. So, a new and better building is confidently expected to replace the comparatively modern structure which gave way to the flames.

We note that a "pocket peddler" of liquor, who pleaded guilty to two offenses when brought into Washington county court last week, was accompanied by his wife and little child. We also note that Judge Waterman sentenced the man to fourteen months in the house of correction, just as if there had been no wife or child present in court. Whether or not the presence of the wife or child was intended as a silent plea for leniency in this case, it appears that Judge Waterman has views of his own.

Between the imminent criticisms of Mayor Burke and the bullets of unruly characters, the work of the Burlington policeman is not the most blissful occupation one might imagine. The shooting of Policeman John H. Ryan yesterday while performing his duties recalls the shooting of Policeman McGrath a few years ago, while he was also engaged in performing his duties as a guardian of the peace and quiet of the city. The Burlington policeman shares somewhat in the dangers which are constantly before the policemen of the large cities, since Burlington, because it is the largest community hereabouts and because it lies midway of the traveled route between Montreal and New York, retains some of the hotness of society that is drifting back and forth.

A NOVEL BUT REASONABLE REQUIREMENT.

The salt-water state of Massachusetts is, naturally, one of the first to make the art of swimming obligatory on the pupils of the public schools, and Boston, taking the lead, has ordered both male and female pupils of the public high schools to take instruction in swimming under competent instructors. The obligation will probably be removed in the case of those students who are found to be physically not fit for the ordeal, which will remove much of the objection from the requirement. For the other pupils it will be a good thing, both from the standpoint of physical development and from the ability to preserve oneself in case of danger from drowning. The requirement seems strange because of its novelty, but not because of its foolishness.

A VIGOROUS RESTRAINT NEEDED.

The usual aftermath of lawlessness following the open deer season is apparent this year. It is difficult for some people to see the logic of their being allowed to kill deer during six days of the year and never during the remaining days; and the only way to deal with such people is to corner them and bring them into the courts to take a serious lesson. The shooting of a buck between Montpelier and Middlesex last Sunday is an illustration of lack of restraint on the part of some of the public. These outbreaks of lawlessness are more apt to come closely following the open season; but it is said that in the remote mountain regions of the state venison forms a staple article of food the year around. The statement is made for a fact that a Vermontor went into the mountain region of central Vermont during the month of September and was served with venison by his host, and there was no secret made of the fact that the deer had been only recently killed. It is difficult to get at the people who thus defy a prohibition which has been placed on the whole state, because of their remoteness from community life; but the prosecution of offenders in instances like that of last Sunday should be attended with much less difficulty and the punishment of the offenders would be beneficial in impressing the fact that the prohibition of the killing of deer during the closed season is meant for all the people of the state and not merely for those who are disposed to respect the enactment. A little more vigorous hand on this kind of lawlessness is desirable.

CURRENT COMMENT

Great Self-restraint.

"Up-to-date," says the Bristol Herald, "Addison county has not mentioned a favorite son for the governorship. Quietness and lots of it prevails from Chimney Point on the west to Poitau hill on the east, and from Monkton on the north to Gosden on the south. We wonder if this is the calm before the storm." Who is the proposed storm, brother, Judge Weeks or One-Up-a-Time Frank L. Fish?—St. Johnsbury Republican.

Rutland's Theatre Needs.

If one company or organization build an adequate opera house in Rutland, as now projected, let the matter go at that. Rutland wants one good opera house, no more and no less. But it requires one as good as there is in the country—convenient, safe, centrally located, managed on a broad, liberal scale and cared for in the most approved way—and such an one is enough for all our needs. One opera house of this kind in this city will meet all public and private requirements and will be a satisfactory investment to its projectors. More than one would be a superfluity. Ornateness and decorations are not essential to such a structure. This goes without saying. Leave out the expensive ginger-bread work, and save just that much money—and distress.—Rutland News.

Brattleboro Still Isolated.

The supreme court has officially ruled what everybody else, familiar with the locality, knew before, that South Vermont is the principal village of the town of Vernon and is entitled to a station if it wants one. The suspicion that the agitation over the matter was an attempt on the part of thirty citizens of Brattleboro to compel the moving of the station to Vernon Depot, five or six miles nearer Brattleboro, is not ruled on in the supreme court decision. Brattleboro is still ten miles from a bar and train service is wretchedly inadequate.—Bennington Banner.

St. Johnsbury's Lesson.

The fearful loss of life at St. Johnsbury last Saturday would indicate that there was negligence somewhere. A fire department that hasn't any ladders long enough to reach above the third story of a building is not properly equipped, and no fire escapes on the front side of the building is less satisfactory. It is hardly a proper time to find fault when women have entered so many homes, and gloom is cast over a place by the loss of so many lives, yet it would seem that a bit of precaution might have prevented this fearful catastrophe. Let other places take warning by this and look to their fire apparatus and fire escapes.—Morrisville News and Citizen.

Faith in New England.

The Boston Herald finds comfort in the following strikingly significant paragraph: "If it is true, as reported in a current paragraph, that J. Pierpont Morgan's largest individual holding of any railway security is a block of New York, New Haven & Hartford stock, that fact indicates a faith in the possibilities of New England development that should be an inspiration to New England people. It is evident that the shrewd New York financier does not believe that the resources of New England have been drained."

Judging from the manner in which capital is coming to different parts of Vermont as well as other sections of New England, outside capitalists have more faith in our possibilities than we have ourselves. That is why we sell them our natural resources for a song and buy them back at once, when improved, for shillings stated in terms of dollars.—Burlington Free Press.

Precautions Against Fire.

Precautions against fire are a good like talk to expedite the procedure. Slow burning buildings, fire escapes and extinguishers may all fail where the mischief occurs at night in an unoccupied building, where the elevator forms a roaring chimney, communicating with all floors, where a tardy alarm brings on the fire department to find the fire beyond control, where a tangle of overhead wires makes ladder rescues impossible, and where frightened people jump, fall or rush to their death through panic.

There seems to be a good field here for educational work on the part of the insurance companies and the municipal governments of the various larger towns and villages of the state. A fire panic horror was easily averted in a Vergennes school the other day by reason of the fire drill, children being trained to march out by drum beat, thus emptying the rooms in less than three minutes. Would it not be a proper thing for village and city fire departments to organize fire drills in office buildings, crowded tenements and factories, thus teaching the working of apparatus, alarms, escapes, etc.? Certainly some of the victims of the St. Johnsbury horror might have been saved if such a system had been in operation. Meanwhile, certain lessons from this latest fire seem to be fundamental:

Sink the wires: Compel watchmen or automatic alarms in thickly tenanted buildings. Safeguard the elevator shaft, especially in basement entrances: Provide fire escapes and train people in their use and locality.

There are buildings in every town of considerable size in this state where the like of the St. Johnsbury catastrophe is apt to occur any time. Rutland is no exempt. It would be a very righteous deed for the authorities to make a careful examination of all our tenement buildings and prescribe regulations that would be effective and timely. A few dollars expended now might prevent heavy loss and irreparable bereavement hereafter.—Rutland Herald.
